How did the Fund perform during the reporting period?

During the period, the Easterly Small Cap Value Fund returned 7.93%, compared to a return of 7.58% for the Russell 2000 Value Index.

Major indexes posted positive results for the period as better than expected economic data and decelerating inflation provided a supportive backdrop for equity performance. Given the strong equity market performance over the last year, the S&P 500 now trades at 21.5 times forward earnings, above its 30-year average of 16.9 times. The rise in market valuations continues to be driven by increased concentration of the largest stocks. Across the market cap spectrum, growth stocks significantly outpaced value stocks on relative terms. The valuation disparity between value and growth stocks widened, nearing levels last seen during the onset of the Covid Pandemic. The market's valuation disparity continues to remain wide by historical standards.

The Federal funds rate is currently set between 4.25-4.5%, down 100 basis points from 12 months ago. The yield curve (as defined by the spread between the two-year and ten-year treasury note) returned to a positive spread in September of last year but remains historically flat as economic and geopolitical risks have investors questioning the overall strength of the economy. Many investors are now extrapolating that softening monetary policy will be needed to offset weakening economic conditions and potentially higher unemployment.

Currently, small value stocks (Russell 2000 Value) trade at about 17x forward earnings. Excluding those companies without earnings, small cap stocks trade at 15.2x. This compares favorably to both the broad market (S&P 500 - 21.5x earnings) as well as small cap growth indices (Russell 2000 Growth - 38.9x), highlighting the historically low relative valuation levels. Over the medium-term, a reacceleration in earnings momentum for domestic small-capitalization equities, relative to the broad market, provides an attractive catalyst for investors within US equity markets.
