How did the Fund perform during the reporting period?

For the fiscal year ended August 31, 2026, the Fund returned 7.99%, compared with 7.44% for the Bloomberg REIT & Real Estate DM Large, Mid & Small Cap Net Return Index. Positive investor sentiment was tempered by shifting central bank policies, trade tensions linked to U.S. tariffs, higher energy prices, and ongoing geopolitical uncertainty arising from the conflicts in the Ukraine and Middle East. At the same time, higher construction cost (for both materials and labor) curtailed new supply, giving landlords incremental pricing power. Real estate fundamentals generally improved, supporting steady—though modest—returns.

Relative performance benefited from security selection in North America and Asia Pacific. Canada was a particularly strong source of value added, led by Primaris REIT, while U.S. holdings including American Healthcare REIT, Iron Mountain and COPT Defense Properties also contributed. In Asia, Hongkong Land was a meaningful contributor, and the Fund benefited from not owning several weaker benchmark constituents. Exposure to data centers and healthcare real estate benefitted from strong secular demand, including continued investment in AI and digital infrastructure and favorable seniors-housing fundamentals. These gains were partly offset by weaker results in Western Europe, particularly the United Kingdom, where security selection detracted. Unite Group and Grainger were among the largest individual detractors. In the U.S., underweight positions in Prologis and Welltower negatively impacted relative performance during a period of strong industrial and healthcare REIT performance.

During the year, the Fund maintained a differentiated portfolio emphasizing companies and sectors with visible demand, attractive internal growth and stronger balance sheets, while remaining selective in more rate-sensitive or fundamentally challenged areas. Portfolio positioning continued to favor opportunities in data centers, healthcare and selected retail and industrial real estate, while generally avoiding sectors where supply, affordability or balance-sheet risks were less favorable.

How has the Fund performed since inception?

The Fund has adopted the performance of the James Alpha Global Real Estate Investments Portfolio, a series of The Saratoga Advantage Trust (the "Predecessor Portfolio") as the result of a reorganization of the Predecessor Portfolio into the Fund, which was consummated after the close of business on March 19, 2021 (the "Reorganization"). Prior to the Reorganization, the Fund had not yet commenced operations. The returns shown for periods ending on or prior to March 19, 2021 are those of the Class S shares of the Predecessor Portfolio. Class S shares of the Predecessor Portfolio were reorganized into Class R6 of the Fund, respectively, after the close of business on March 19, 2021. Class R6 shares' returns of the Fund will be different from the returns of the Predecessor Portfolio's Class S shares as they have different expenses. Performance information reflects the impact of fee waivers, expense caps and/or reimbursements in effect during the period shown. If terminated, future expenses may be higher which would impact the Fund's performance.
